Does ‘Learn and Earn’ make the grade?

Superficial incentives fail to instill long-term values

BY RICHARD D. LAKES

Students should be expected to protect themselves from the constant onslaught of aversive impositions in the classroom. Simply the latest boardroom scheme is a scheme that misguidedly attempts to pay low salaries among Atlanta’s urban poor a miserly $1 per hour for standing. The “Learn and Earn” after-school program, funded by Charles L. McKee, the CEO of a local bank, and directed through a nonprofit, founded by Jackie Cushman, the daughter of Newt Gingrich, is piloting the “Learn and Earn” program in Fulton County schools.

Jackie Cushman is president of the board of directors of the “Learn and Earn” Foundation Makes a Difference, Inc. Her group is piloting the “Learn and Earn” program in Fulton County schools.

For now, money talks to get students hooked on studies

BY JACKIE GUSMAN

The Learning Makes a Difference Foundation effort has sparked a heated discussion about how to best motivate students to learn. It could not have come too soon.

"Citizens in Crisis: A Special Analytical Report on High School Graduation Rates," by Christopher B. Johnson, reports nationwide high school graduation rates at only 60 percent. Georgia says even that with a graduation rate of 50 percent.

The Atlanta Council for Educational Excellence rates "Each year over 50,000 students in Georgia do not graduate. The cost to Georgia! More than $1.5 billion in lost wages, taxes and productivity over the lifetime of the 2017 dropouts alone. In his piece, "Learning Makes a Difference," Jackie Cushman, the daughter of Newt Gingrich, is piloting the "Learn and Earn" program in Fulton County schools.
